second-class matter.

A proposition lately presented to the Academy of Medicine of New York is of interest outside of the medical profession, for it is based on the theory that under a rational treatment pulmonary consumption is

The scheme proposes the establishment in the neighborhood of New York of an institurion for the treatment of consumptives modelled after a sacatorium now in successful operation in Germany, near Frankfort. At present our homes for consumptives are simply charitable institutions, to which patients go to find a comparatively comforta-ble place in which to die, but the German hospital is something very different. It was founded in 1874 by a joint stock company, and its purpose is not merely alleviation, but actual and permanent cure of the dis-

The head of the Faikenstein sanatorium is Dr. P. Dettweiler, who was himself a sufferer from pulmonary consumption. The climate of Falkenstein is not believed to have any specific influence on the diseased organ, the favorable results secured being due rather to the method of treatment.

due rather to the method of treatment.

This method, in brief, is to keep the patient either lying or walking in open air, almost day and night, and to give him a rich, liberal, and peculiarly adapted diet, in which milk is freely used, and also wine and brandy under careful regulations. Each case is treated separately according to its individual necessities rately, according to its individual necessities and compressed or dilated air, massage, and the douche are employed as their advantage may be indicated. The patient's life is controlled down to the smallest detalls, nothing being left to his own judgment. After being acclimated, he must spend many hours daily, lying, properly covered, on a lounge placed upon one of the verandas, or on one of the rotating pavilions, permanent air and rest treatment being the specialty of the institution. Even in the coldest weather the patients are subjected to this treatment, unless their cases are of the severest, or they are suffering from in-tercurrent diseases. Six hours is the average time spent on the loan, e, while many remain from nine to eleven hours, "passing the time reading or writing, playing domi-noes or chess, the verandas and pavillons being well lighted after dark." The sys-tematic use of massage, the daily rubbing down of patients, and the cold douche are also features of the treatment. The diet is very carefully regulated to tempt the appe tite and with reference to the condition of CHAMPAGNE AND OTHER WINES. the digestion, the meals consisting of a breakfast from 7 to 8:30, a second breakfast from 7 to 8:30, a second breakfast at 10, dinner at 1, fresh milk at 4, and a warm supper at 7. The food is well pre-pared and "cooked rather rich," and it is so appetitizing that 86 per cent, of all the pa-tients gain an average of 9 9-10 pounds each in three months, "the administration of such a liberal and rich diet amounting almost to overfeeding." Dr. Dettweiler has an especially high opinion of the value of alcohol as a remedial agent in cases of pulmonary consumption, the ordinary patient drinking from three-fourths to a full bottle of good claret, Rhine or Hungarian wine daily, and others for a learner shorter paried receiving two teams. longer or shorter period receiving two tea-spoonfuls of pure brandy every hour or two from morning to night, besides a glass of brandy milk punch at retiring. "After numerous trials and experiments with a large variety of remedies," writes Dr. Dettweiler, "I will say freely that I would rather distribute the strength of the say freely that I would rather distribute the say of saying or any pense with the use of salicyl, quining, or an tipyrine than with good wine or brandy." Finally the patients sleep with their windows open all night, and the greatest care is taken to preserve cleanliness.

The average number in the sanatorium is 160 in the summer and 120 in winter, and the entire cost to a patient is not over $3 a day. The institution is financially successful, but the stockholders are limited to 5 per cent., the surplus being expended on im-provements or held as a fund for the estab-lishment of a similar sanatorium for the treatment of poorer patients. As to the results of the method, Dr. Dettweiler says that "if the disease has not made too much progress, and if the treatment is continued a sufficient length of time, more than one-half of all cases of bacillary phthisis should be cured, and they will remain so if the patient will live accordingly afterward."-N.
